not yet been renewed. Loose samples of dried hops will soon be available and buyers appear to prefer to wait for these loose samples before renewing bids. On the other hand growers feel that their efforts to produce a clean picked choice quality New York State hop will be rewarded with a product desired by discriminating brewers.

The growers right now are not thinking particularly about price. They are busy with last minute preparation for harvest.

Strobeck Calls The Farm Subsidy Economic Cancer

Propaganda Exploiting Theory of Federal Subsidy To Compensate For Poor Economic Status Being Spread Over Country, Says Secretary of Dairymen's League Cooperative Association

Termining subsidy payments, excepting those necessitated by grave circumstances, "a cancer on the body of our economic life," Ernest C. Strobeck of Macedon, N. Y., secretary of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, today declared.

"Propaganda exploiting the theory of federal subsidy to compensate for poor economic status has been spreading over the country, and subsidy practices have been ingrained into the body politic.

"With respect to commodity prices, this snare has been laid in the paths of both processors and farmers. To be entrapped by it means that the snare-caught unwary will have yielded something more precious than a temporary comfort or an illusory sense of security.

Should Examine Implications

"When all commodity prices are subject to price fixed ceilings, it behooves the American people and particularly consumers to examine the implications of a subsidy payment in lieu of either a normal cost of operation or a fair market price for a commodity whether in its raw or processed state. To grant a processor a subsidy in order to compensate for losses on handling a commodity is not a subsidy to the processor. It may be a compensatory payment from public funds to subsidize the consumer. If the farmer's price is too low, under such conditions the chances are that payment to the processor is a method of avoiding both an increased price to the farmer and an increased price to the consumer. The act of compensation then becomes a penalty on the farmer and a subsidy to the consumer.

"If the processor's spread is about right and the farmer receives a price payment from the government above the market price, the consumer and not the farmer, receives the subsidy; for the only reason the government would then have for making price payments to farmers would be to keep down retail prices.

Public Misinformed

"Great publicity usually accompanies such price payments to farmers. The general public is led to believe that farmers are special wards of the government marked out for privileged treatment. Indignation often is manifested by urban consumers against such payments because they do not realize that they are the real beneficiaries and are themselves the wards of the government to that extent. Again great resentment is felt by all who find the public debt rising and their taxes materially increasing as a result of such price subsidy payments.

"In a war economy as well as in a peace economy, restrained or depressed agricultural commodity prices, even when accompanied by supplemental price payments from public funds, will unbalance the national economic structure. This is particularly true under conditions where no control over wage rates is being established or where if established wage rates will be permitted to rise in accordance with some formula, such as the index of living costs.

"All farmers should deplore and oppose such a policy. It should be thoroughly understood that price subsidies and processors' subsidies when used in lieu of normal prices and necessary processing spreads are both costly and against the public interest. If the subsidy policy becomes fastened to our national life, it will force vicious governmental practices destructive of democratic institutions, and representative government.

In Line With War Needs

"Normal advances in the prices of agricultural products are in line with our war needs. Propaganda designed to make it appear that the inevitable breakdown in the price ceiling operations result from rises in the prices of farm products rather than the necessary spreads for processors, wholesalers and other handlers of products between the farm and the retail consumer is unfair and leads to class conflict. Outbursts of this character, are creating deep-set antagonisms between urban and rural people.

Feeding Laying Hens

Successful poultry farmers pay nearly as much attention to the way they feed their pullets and laying hens as they do to the kind of feeds they provide. For one thing, abrupt changing in the diet causes the birds to go "off feed" and results in lower egg production and slower growth as will the use of stale feed. If a change in diet must be made it should be made gradually and extend over a period of a week or ten days.

One practice followed by many of the better poultrymen is to provide only a little more feed each day than the birds can clean up. The leftovers, if clean and dry, can be mixed thoroughly with the fresh feed in the hoppers.

In this way there will be no accumulation of stale feed at the bottom of the hoppers, reducing likelihood of mold.

DEWEY GIVES INTERVIEW

I think it is a fair summary of Mr. Dewey's convictions and political creed at this moment to say that he regards competency of leadership at Albany a prime requisite. He feels that competent men with full power to conduct the war are a national necessity but that function should in no way impinge on the governance of New York or any other state. He feels that, while such men with power should be put in control and the highest efficiency maintained in the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the government of this state, its every function should be open to the observation, honest criticism and even censure of the public. That is the only way to maintain democracy. If we do not defend and keep our democratic processes strong and operative in our towns, cities and the state, we cannot expect to save them in Washington. This is no stricture upon anybody. It is simply a reflection upon human nature in action.

Thomas E. Dewey is a clear thinker, a keen observer, a vigorous man, a citizen of constantly mounting experience and ability. He is a most affable and attractive gentleman, an accomplished leader in his own right. He will make an excellent governor in the best traditions of this state and in the new spirit of a reinvigorated America.
